Context and work environment

Structure description

As part of the Research Initiatives in Grenoble Alpes (IRGA), the Doctoral Research Grant (ADR) aims to finance a Ph D in public law or sociology in order to carry out a transdisciplinary study, combining legal and sociological analyzes, on the non-use of social rights (ENORDOS). It aims to create a new collective dynamic between a legal laboratory (CRJ) and a social science laboratory (PACTE). The non-use of rights has long been a strong focus of University research thanks to ODENORE.

These teams are already involved in the framework of funding obtained through a call for projects from the Defender of Rights on the study of "particular vulnerability resulting from the economic situation" (« éclairages sociologiques en vue d'une meilleure appréhension par le droit antidiscriminatoire » - ESADA project).

The doctoral research funded by this project would aim to legally address the issue of non-recourse to social rights. Indeed, if the non-recourse is an object of study, which from a scientific point of view, is already well defined in the socio-political fields and to a lesser extent, economic, force is to note the lack of interest of which jurists have so far, very largely, demonstrated in its regard.

It would be a question of adopting a moderate external point of view on the law, so as to open the comprehension of the legal phenomenon to the data produced by the socio-political studies of the non-recourse to social rights.

Concretely, this would involve experimenting with the inclusion of data produced by socio-political studies of the non-use of several social benefits, in the field of legal analysis of the mechanisms that establish and regulate these benefits.

Therefore, without calling into question the border between law and non-law, it would be a question of theorizing and applying a new way of understanding social rights legally, with the idea that this approach could ultimately, in cross-referencing the data produced by legal and social disciplines, enriching the theory of fundamental social rights. The ambition of doctoral research would be on the one hand to question the feasibility and relevance of this approach, and on the other hand, to identify normative orientations likely to participate in reducing the phenomenon of non-recourse.

Team description (N+1 and colleagues) : under the authority of Team composed of X agents (X A, X B, X C...)

The doctoral student will complete a thesis in public law, under the co-supervision of Serge SLAMA, professor of public law (CRJ), and Laurence DUMOULIN, researcher at the CNRS (Pacte). It will be hosted both within the CRJ (Centre de recherches juridiques) within the Faculty of Law and the Social Sciences Laboratory, and PACTE within the ODENORE team (Observatory of non-recourse to rights and services).

The team is also made up of H el ena REVIL (ODENORE) and Julie ARROYO (CRJ)
